Regular and Orderly.

The talk to the effect that the non-nominate as candidates for Representatives in the Legislature by the only legal regular caucus held by the Republican party in this city was withdrawn in deference to the wishes of certain other men claiming to be candidates and reframing the question to a general caucus to be called for the purpose is a mere child's play. The Republican party has not held a general caucus. A small number of Republicans assembled in what was called a general caucus and went through the form of making nominations.

Just such action might be taken at any time as the regular organization, but it would not be recognized as the action of the Republican party.

It is admitted that the ward primaries were regularly called by the Republican

City Committee acting through its majority. That action has been endorsed by every Republican official authority in Bangor under order of the City Commi-

tee. The change in the caucus system was made in accordance with a memorial signed by over six hundred of the representative Republicans of Bangor. The question was one fully within the control of the City Committee which is the recognized Republican authorities. Up to 1890 the City Committee was called by the party and at that time it was decided that it would be better to change the system and leave the selection of a committee to the ward caucuses. The change was made by the City Committee itself. It was a wise departure from the custom of party usage for years, but no one questioned the authority of the committee in the matter.

Indeed the question was not raised. In Portland the change was made from the general caucus to ward primaries by the City Committee by its own voluntary action, without any formal request, simply because the committee believed it was in the interest of the party and

The American farmer knows that when a manufacturing town is busy, with all its laboring receiving steady employment, the full wages, that town consumes more flour, more meat, more potatoes and more of everything else than when half the wheels idle. When the McKinley law was in operation, and every man who wanted work could find it, the United States consumed 75 per cent. more wheat and 50 per cent. more corn than in the first year of the Wilson law. Under the Mc-Kinley law the consumption of cotton was 60 per cent. greater than under the Wilson law. Now, why was this? Was it not because there was plenty of work for men, so that they could earn the money to buy all that they wanted to eat and wear? And unless we provide the former amount of work for wage earners the farmer's wheat and corn, the sheep-raiser's wool and the planter's cotton will go begging.

We believe nobody knows this better than the American farmer. He knows it because under the McKinley law he sold his crops and under the Wil-

else, contract debts.

The American farmer knows that prothe sign sticker is arousing the wrath of all who enjoy Maine sobriety. There could be no close time on him. Let the other visitors butt him down.

While a crew was digging just back of Dexter's jewelry store in Dexter, one of the last week a curious object was unearthed about the size of a 20 cent piece with a small ring in it. When cleaned it proved to be a gold pin and on one side was a log cabin, with this inscription: "I am the choice of the people's choice for the year 1840." On the other side was a portrait of a candidate and this inscription, "Major Gen. W. H. Harrison, born 1793 1775," the day of the month, 19th, being erased. It was the old log campaign badge of 1840.

There's a queer story about the Italian canon of Boston, seeking refuge from outlaws sworn to kill him. His name is Ferdinand De Pilippo. For years he was the trusted banker of the nobility of Italian in Boston. He lost his money. He was not fond of being embarrassed but the ignorant people who lost their savings only know they trusted him and now have nothing show for it. It is said they have sworn to kill him and he is taking out of the city on a farm on Long Island.

"There may not be death in an insecticide humming bee," says a Gloucester physician, "but some of the most fatal of human ailments, such as diphtheria, are caused by their breaking. The fall is usually but a short distance, but for some reason, probably because persons trust themselves so completely to for all they are worth, the hitting the groans "in such cases" usually never cease. It is like stepping off a stair when you think you are close down. In that case a partial fall of six inches will upset your whole anatomy, because of its unexpectedness. I have seen numerous cases of hammock falls where such a shock was given to the system that the patients never fully recovered their health. It behooves those who use hammocks to be very cautious and see that the hangings can be trusted."

A truckman in a Maine city has a peculiar way of amusing himself. The firm for which he does considerable trucking is located on a street through which the electric cars pass, and when he backs up to the end of the load or unloads his team blocks that part of the street from the trucks to the railroad track, and frequently the cars haven't room to pass without the driver taking the horse out of the shafts. Wednesday morning the truckman had just arrived at this place with his load of hay when a team of white truckmen came along. When the truckman got control of the road, he held it. The car was stopped and obliged to remain until the driver had made several unsuccessful efforts to back his load far enough to clear the track. Failing in this, the truckman proceeded at a very moderate pace to tickle his horse out of the chills. The motorman was considerably better informed as to what also the passengers, and the truckman knew it, as indicated by his laugh and other signs of jay. To make the story short, it is enough to say that he bothered the car as long as he could. He probably did it to plague the car conductor and motorman, and his performance was naturally exasperating to the passengers.
